NUMBER FOUR

When I was a young man, I was pro-fessor of languages in the Blank institute. One of our lady teachers was an interesting young person, very intelligent and astractive. She and I made each other's acquaintance, and-I may as well admit it first as last-we became very warmly at-

The duties of Miss Hanson had become very onerous, altogether too much so for her delicate frame, and I, pained to ses one who was so dear to me laboring beyoud her strength, looked about to see if something better could not be obtained for her. Gladly would I at once have made her my wife and thus have obviated the necessity of her earning her own support. but in the then state of my finances such a thing was not to be thought of. And so, not being able to do as I would, I tried to do what I could, and success attended my efforts.

A wealthy gentleman of my acquaint-ance who had several young children, wanting a first class governess for them, I eagerly proposed Miss Hanson, and, her examination proving satisfactory, she was duly installed in her new situation. She duly installed in her new situation. She found it to be easy, pleasant and profitable, and, my mind being set at rest regarding her, I now turned my attention exclusively to the duties of my profession, resoived to postpone for a year or two the pleasant duties of courtship. I judged that we would both be better fitted for the faithful discharge of our engagements seeing each other but seldom than we should otherwise be. To be sure, it would should otherwise be. To be sure, it would have pleased me well to have received frequent letters from my esteemed Clara, but as she expressed herself very much averse to letter writing, I would not require her to distress herself for my sake. Several months after Miss Hanson entered upon her work as governess the eldest son of her employer came home. He admired Miss Hanson from the first, and it was not long before he made her aware of the fact. He was pressing in his suit, he was wealthy, he was present with her, and my ladylove transferred her affections and her engagement to him. The employer, discovering what was taking place, was enraged at his son's folly and at the lady's presumption, as he termed it, and would listen to nothing but an utter abandonment of the engagement. He turned the young lady away, and she proceeded to New York in search of another situation. She had entered into arrangements to teach for six months-I do not remember where-when her lover suddenly appeared before her and insisted upon a private and immediate marriage. She consented, and after the ceremony the bridegroom went his way and the bride hers for the term of six mentls. At the expiration of that time they again met and proceeded to the city of Detroit

All this time no spirit whispered in my ear of danger or trouble. Calmly I labored on, only now and then pausing to think contentedly of my Clara and to feel renewed satisfaction that she was so well placed. But suddenly I heard of her conduct-of all except her marriage-and of course she was lost to me as much as though I had known her to be wedded. could not overlook such decelt and heart-

Five years rolled away, and on a wild, stormy night I arrived at Detroit. Feel-ing very much fatigued, I saked to be shown at once to my room in the hotel. Hardly had I been left alone when some one knocked on the door next to mine. "Who's there!" said a woman's voice.

"Father," was the reply. "Mrs. Jenkins is below and wishes to see you. I told her that you were not very well and had retired, but she will take no denial." "Then she must come up here, pa. We can never dress again and go down to her."

"Let me see, what was Mrs. Jenkins' maiden name?" asked one of the voices in the next room, when the father had withdrawn. Hitherto I had been sitting in contemplative mood before my fire, hearing because I could not help it, the partition being so very thin. "Why, she was Clara Hanson-don't you know. She was our schoolmate in Boston years ago." You may judge that there was a very sudden and violent alteration in my state of mind. In breathless expectation I awaited the coming of the visitor. She had really married Jenkins then. Presently that well remembered step drew near. There was a noisy meeting, much laugh-ter, many questions, many fervent expres-sions of affection, of delight at being once more together. But, come now, let us hear each other's ndventures," said Clara, and when her friends had related theirs she began to talk of hers. "Can you imagine my feelings as I heard that woman tell what I have already told, and much more? I heard all as if in a dream, yet I know that it was realityas well as anything can be in this unreal world. Presently I rose, and stealing softly into the hall laid just before the door of the room where Clara was, one of my cards, and in excited silence waited the results. It was who I had reckened on Mrs. Jenkins saw it instantly as she stepped from her friends' room. one has dropped a note," I heard her say. I heard her move toward the light. Then she gave a fittle shrick and rushed back to her friends.

Oh, Mr. -- has been here. He must have seen me come in and followed me. What shall I do?" "Who is Mr. -- ? You did not mention him. Why do you fear him?" asked "Oh, he was an old beau of mine," said

"I had a great many, and I was engaged to four other men when I married Mr. Jerkins. Mr. — was the fourth one."-Exchange. How We Tell the Time.

There are street clocks in this city whose faces do not bear the usual Roman or Arabic numerals, by which, in connect tion with the hands, we are able to tell 15e time, but in their places are 12 letters, forming signs for advertising purposes. These letters answer every purpose, and the time can be told as readily with them as with the conventional characters.

This shows that it is not the kind of mark on the face of a clock, but its location, by means of which we tell the time, If all of the characters on the dial were str ight marks, we could tell the time as well as now. Hold your watch in any position, excepting the usual one, and you will see that the time can be told only with difficulty, be the marks ever so plain. With a watch thus held we mentally place it in the proper position, and then the reading is easily done.—New York Heraid.
